Profile

Tim is an experienced case manager and occupational therapist who has worked clinically as both a practitioner and a manager in a variety of community settings. He has worked for the NHS, local authority, and private practice.

Tim is a keen advocate for people with disabilities, and he has advised on the legislation and suitability of major disability funding projects across the South of England. His clinical experience is varied, working with clients including amputees and those living with spinal injuries and complex orthopaedic problems. He has a sound knowledge of both private and statutory services and how to access appropriate funding support.

Tim has been commended for his support for people who have experienced trauma, have complex needs and who can be distressed/anxious, presenting with individual complexity. Tim assesses, plans, implements, monitors and evaluates rehabilitation, care and support, always working in a person-centred way agreeing SMART goals with those involved using creativity, initiative and problem-solving skills to adapt approaches that will positively engage people.

Tim has worked extensively with clients with neurological deficits following an acquired or traumatic brain injury. He has a specialist interest on the effect these injuries have on the sensory deficits of clients and has worked therapeutically within this field and ensured that sensory integration is not overlooked when assessing clients within his role as a case manager.

Testimonial

"Tim is highly competent and clinically skilled, extremely professional and approachable. Tim manages complex cases and engages positively with clients, family and customers alike. The positive feedback received is always reflective of this. Tim's communication, flexibility and adaptability is clear and apparent in the way he liaises with clients/families and the wider multidisciplinary teams, particularly when this can be under difficult circumstances. Tim's sensitivity is invaluable in supporting the person and by always working in a person-centred way, Tim is conscientious and considerate, supporting people in meeting their needs with a holistic approach."
